7. Description

Located along the 1937 alignment of Route 66 (now SR 122) in Thoreau, this former gas station is a one-story building with hipped and flat roof portions. It has a concrete foundation, metal plate and stucco walls and a metal seamed and asphalt roof. Portions of a white enamel covering with red and blue strips characteristic of early Standard Oil Company gas stations remain on the walls. Large fixed windows are on both sides of the building, and fixed windows flank a metal frame commercial door with a large single light at the front. A broad-pitched hipped canopy extends over a service lane to the concrete pump island and is supported by two metal poles. The garage's sign dating to 1950 is fixed to the roof's ridge, and a lighting fixture is attached to the ceiling of the canopy above the pump island. The pumps date to the late 1940s.

Characteristic of most service stations along rural portions of Route 66, the building is set back from the road, permitting parking and off-road maneuvering room. When the building was moved to its present location, the rear portion of the station with its repair bay was altered. The exterior restrooms were removed, a flat roof replaced the original hipped roof, and a stucco coating was added to the metal walls. This addition, however, does not detract from the historic appearance of the gas station's facade and canopy as they face the old highway.

8. Statement of Significance

The building served as a gas station along Route 66 from 1935 when it was a Standard Oil Company station along the highway in Grants to 1963 when Roy Herman, the longtime operator of the station, bought the building, moved it 200 yds. farther west on Route 66, and ceased selling gasoline to work solely as a garageman. In 1937, the building was moved to Thoreau just as Route 66 had been realigned and the highway moved a half mile south from Thoreau's main street north of the railroad tracks to its present alignment. Longtime station operator, Roy Herman, recalls that it was the first roadside businesses located along this realigned section of the highway and was operated by Joe Anderson, a well-known mechanic in the area. As a young veteran, Mr. Herman worked at the service station, operating the garage in the late 1940s. In 1950 he purchased the station, and he and his son have operated it since. The building is one of the oldest remaining stations along Route 66 in New Mexico and is closely associated with Route 66 and is thus eligible under Criterion A. The building is also eligible under Criterion C as one of the oldest remaining examples of early franchise service stations in New Mexico with its style, plan and materials reflecting an early stage in the evolution of the service station property type. Of particular note is the building's seamed metal construction including its hipped roof. Criterion Consideration B also applies to this building in that while it has been moved from its original location, the moves have occurred along Route 66 so that it retains its significance for its historic association and architectural value.
